WHEN PENN STATE HAS THE BALL

WHEN PENN STATE HAS THE BALL

A pig's up for grabs between Minnesota, Iowa

By Rusty Miller
The Associated Press

Imagine you're a college football player and your coach tells you that you have to win a big game on Saturday so that you can take home a pig. Would that fire you up? It sure works at Minnesota and Iowa.

"We're not playing for the postseason, but we're playing for pride and for the pig, so I think that's enough motivation to go out and play hard," Minnesota quarterback Adam Weber said this week.

BIG TENNOTEBOOK

we've got to try to get it back," Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz said of Floyd.

Those are fighting words. "We'd like very much to keep that pig right here in the Twin Cities," Golden Gophers coach Tim Brewster said.

Why not Long?

Mike Hart figures a high ankle sprain knocked him out of the running for the most coveted trophy in college football. "Obviously if you miss two could see himself moving in front of the camera after he retires, Paterno said, "That's not my cup of tea."

"I'll figure that out in the year 2020. There will be a couple openings in the NFL for me too," JoePa joked at his weekly news conference before trailing off. "When I get out, I'm gone!"

Paterno is in his record 42nd season as head coach. His contract expires at the end of the 2008 season. He said he's enjoying himself too much to quit.

"I find myself mentally correcting myself and trying to make sure I don't say anything inappropriate," he said.

Dependable foot

Jason Reda needs 16 points to become Illinois' career leading scorer, but you won't hear that from him.

The senior isn't talking to reporters, reportedly out of fear of a jinx.

"If that's what he feels, then please don't talk to him," coach Ron Zook said.

Reda has made 13 of 14 field-
